The German Government has, after all, received a heavy rebuil from the United States with regard to its threatened new campaign of frightfulness on the high seas, it seems that the United States tovernment recognises that it cannot expect the Allies to disarm merchantmen, and will, therefore, not give its approval to the German intention to torpedo such vessels. This will be a great blow to Germany, for it has been evident that more was expected than this. It was hoped that American citizens would not be allowed to travel on armed belligerent ships, and that such vessels would be barred from the ports of the United States. Now Germany will lave to run the risk of war with the Inted States if she sinks a merchant hip with American citizens on board.

Now that the question of a supply of the is being satisfactorily dealt with, the war Office has decided upon a revision of the conditions of service in all of the non-ombatant units of the Army. The Army Pay Corps will be one of the first units to be dealt with. The men of this unit were enlisted at the beginning of the war on particularly favourable terms, but heese terms will now be cancelled, and the talk of the men will be either discharged or given the option of enlisting, under less acceptable conditions, into combatant units, if medically fit. Women will be magaged to fill the vacant places, with a proportion of men of military age, but usedically unfit for foreign service, who will come in under the Military Service to. The proposed change has naturally been objected to by the men concerned and some are making efforts to get moved to munition works for clerical or other duties.
